Thinking with Drinking: Wine and the Symposium in Aristophanes
Author(s): A. M. Bowie
Published by: The Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies Stable URL: http://www.jstor.org/stable/632547
Accessed: 11/11/2013 11:02

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at http://www.jstor.org/page/info/about/policies/terms.jsp

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.
THINKING WITH DRINKING: WINE AND THE SYMPOSIUM IN ARISTOPHANES*

The symposium has received much attention recently1 but, despite the frequency with which comedy refers to it,2 little has been said about its function in this genre.3 Pauline Schmitt-Pantel has discussed the public banquets in Aristophanes,4 and suggests that ‘les banquets “privés”... sont décrits avec complaisance, sans que leur fonctionnement soit critiqué et que leur existence soit remise en cause ... Les repas publics sont l’objet, par le biais de la distorsion comique, de critiques’.5 However, we shall find that the imagery of the symposium is not used in so simple and unproblematic a manner, but is employed in a number of different ways to examine and articulate the questions raised by the dramas: like a myth, the symposium seems to be ‘good to think with’. The symposium thus functions in Aristophanic comedy as the symposium did in Greek society, as an institution where values, political and moral, public and personal are expressed.

1 Cf. esp. Murray, Murray and Tceus, Slater, Schmitt-Pantel. I am grateful for comments to audiences in Durham and Oxford and to JHS’s three acute and helpful referees.
2 It is much less frequent in tragedy, though satyr-plays naturally use it: cf. e.g. Aeschylus, Ag. 1186-93, 1384-7, 1395-8; ?Cho. 344, Supp. 27, frr. 55 (Epigonoi); 179-80 (Ostolologoi; satyr-play?). Sophocles, Ajax 1199 ff., frr. 42(?), 277 (Inachus), 425 (Nauplius), 537 (Salmones), 565 (Sundeipnoi; it is possible, but no more, that all these last four plays were satyr-plays), 611. Euripides, Ion 1170-95 (public banquet described, with normal sympotic features), Alc. 747-72 (Heracles alone at feast; cf. 343), Supp. 390 (κοίμων ... ασσίναμος; cf. C. Collard, Euripides: Supplices [Groningen 1975] ad loc. for further tragic reference to the komos), Cyc. 411-26, 451 ff., Herc. 995 (τριτον θήμα; cf. fr. 148 [Andromeda] τελειος of third krater), Phoen. 784-800 (Ares and symposium), frr. 562 (Oineus) and 631 (Pleisthenes) both refer to the kottabos. Cf. M.G. Palutan, ‘La parodia delcottabo nei Evot di Sofocle e negli Ostrologoi di Eschilo’, SIFC xiv (1996) 10-34.
3 An exception is I. Lada-Richards, ‘Initiating Dionysus: ritual and theatre in Aristophanes’ Frogs’ (Diss. Cambridge 1993 = Oxford forthcoming), which obviates the need to discuss Frogs here. I also largely omit the comic fragments, on which Ian Ruffell is working in Oxford; cf. also M. Vetta, Poesia e simposio nella Grecia antica: guida storica e critica (Rome 1983) xiii-ix, esp. xlvii, iv-lvii; E.L. Bowie. For later comedy, cf. R.L. Hunter, Eubulus: the fragments (Cambridge 1983) 186: ‘The common milieu of the symposium in Middle Comedy perhaps contributed to the increasingly moralising tone of Comedy, since the symposium was traditionally a place for gnomic reflection’ (cf. ibid. 22).
4 Schmitt-Pantel 222-31.
5 224; the distinction is not total: public feasts can take the form of private symposia.

I. INTRODUCTION

Young men should not be spectators at recitals of iambic poems or at comedies until they reach the age when they are allowed to take part in reclining and drinking wine.’ [Arist. Pol. 1336b20-2]} private, were tested. Comedy thus employs the symposium just as did archaic lyric, Plato, and the historians. Representations of the symposium and the imagery associated with it are used to structure the plays and their arguments, sometimes through full sympotic scenes, more often through selection of elements from the deipnon–symposium–komos complex, rather than as vases will depict different aspects of the symposium in a selective way or suggest location in a particular place or on stage through a symbolic short-hand. This complex, for which, for brevity’s sake, I shall often use the terms ‘symposium’ and ‘sympotic’, can be sketched for future reference as follows. At the deipnon, food but not wine was taken. The symposium itself was inaugurated by a libation and tasting of neat wine with the words χαυρθοῦ δαίμονος (‘in honour of the Good Daimon’); then three kraters were mixed; delicacies (tragemata) were served; hymns and scolia were sung, a myrtle branch being passed from singer to singer; the equality of the symposiasts was expressed in various ways. Finally, in the komos, the symposiasts might go boisterously into the street, accompanied by slaves with torches and perhaps bars, to the house of some attractive person, there to perform the paraklausithyron in the hope of luring them out. Komos, from which comedy derives its name, was also used of other institutions, such as processions in honour of gods, epinicia, groups of satyrs, and weddings, echoes of which will also be found in Aristophanes.

6 Cf. Pl. Laws 1.649d-50b (τῆς ἐν οἶνω βασάνου). Cf. wine as the ‘mirror’ of the soul (Alc. fr. 333; Theog. 499-500; Aes. fr. 393), and current work on the iconography of drinking vessels (e.g. Lissarrague, Bérard).
8 Though earlier generally critical of the symposium, in Laws i-ii he explores the symposium as a place of testing and education (M. Tecusan, ‘Logos sympotikos’ in Murray 238-60); cf. Rep. 7.562c-d, the democratic state’s ‘thirst’ for freedom served by ‘bad wine-pourers’ too generous with unmixed wine.
9 ’Since such entertainments may be seen as a microcosm of society ... a properly conducted symposium or deipnon was an index of civilised behaviour’ (G. Paul, ‘Symposia and deipna in Plutarch’s Lives and in other historical writings’, in Slater 166).
11 Cf. A.B. Cook, Zeus: a study in ancient religion ii pt. 2 (Cambridge 1925) 1125 n.1, esp. passages quoted on 1129; cf. Diod. Sic. iv 3 θαυτὶ εἰς τῶν δειπνῶν, δητὶν ἄριστος ὀνόμα διδύμα πάσιν, ἐπιλέξειν ἄριστον δήμονος; Plut. Mor. 655e, 735d-e for use of the phrase before drinking new wine.
12 Dedicated to Zeus and the Olympians, the heroes and Zeus Soter (or Teleius). Cook (n.11), 1123 n.7 lists the references to the different krating: cf. E. Fraenkel, Aeschylus: Agamemnon (Oxford 1950) 652-3; Hunter (n.3) 185-9.
13 Cf. Athen. 641f and Alexis fr. 190.
14 Cf. Dicaearchus fr. 89 W (= Σένε Clouds 1364); At. frr. 444 and perhaps 235.
15 Vases show this equality by the spatial arrangement of symposiasts around the krating. All seats were equally important; wine was distributed in equal measures, as was food, which is often so represented on vases; each drinker had his turn with the myrtle-branch.
17 Denied in Arist. Poet. 1448a37 (ὦς κομμῳδός οὐκ ἄπο τοῦ κομμαζέων λεχέντας), but found in Platonius de com. 2.1 (Kaiibel, CGF p.7) and later passages in Kaibel pp. 16, 34, 36, 38, 58, 62, 72. This etymology is usually given second place to that from κόμη.
18 The word needs to be related to a wider range of activities in comedy than simply marriage, which was the suggestion of F.M. Cornford in The origin of Attic comedy (Cambridge 1914).
19 No extant comic chorus is described explicitly as a komos: contrast Eur. Cycl. 39 and Seafood ad loc. Cf. Et. Orion. p. 49.8 St. on Banqueters: ἐν ἴρῳ ἤρχαλεσσα: δειπνώντες καὶ ἀναστάντες χορὸς ἐγένετο; and the play-titles Κωμισσαρία ἢ 'Αριστος (Epicharmus), Κόκλως (Epicharmus and Aristias), Ὀδυσσης (Crinatus) and Ἡφαστος (Acharaeus).
The socio-political role of the symposium in fifth-century Athens is important background to our study, but there is less evidence for it than for the earlier period. The formal symposium seems to have belonged largely to the wealthier classes, but was not necessarily perceived as inimical to the democracy. The clubs / symposia were probably not primarily political institutions: even the hetaireia or the synomosia spent most of its time engaged in sympotic actions, and it was out of these that its political activities "in law cases and contests for office" (ἐπὶ δίκαιος καὶ ἀρχοῖς, Thuc. viii 54.4) emerged. Nor were the clubs all of a single, anti-democratic temper: Ath. Pol. 34.3 speaks of clubs of different persuasions at the time of the Oligarchic Revolution, and Thucydides (ibid.) recounts Peisander's attempts to have them act in unison. Calhoun saw the events of 411 as a turning point in people's attitudes to the clubs, while Murray goes a little earlier, to the time of the Hermocopidae and Profanation of the Mysteries.

Aristophanes' evidence is somewhat problematic. Murray suggests that Philocleon's ignorance of sympotic behaviour in Wasps shows that 'to the ... audience, the symposion is an alien world of licence and misbehaviour'. But the situation is ambiguous: Bdelycleon can call on the slave to prepare the deipnon, so we can get drunk at last', which suggests sympotic activity was not unknown in that house. A household where an old father knew little of the symposium unlike his more sophisticated son is imaginable, but also at least odd, and the scene may be less a realistic description than a device to foreground crucial oppositions in the play. There is a similar problem with Strepsiades' symposium in Clouds, because of the difficulty of gauging his socio-economic position. Nonetheless, if poorer people spent little time sympotically, the frequency of sympotic imagery in drama suggests familiarity with its features, and in Aristophanes the symposium is not associated exclusively with any particular social class.

There will be no simple 'totalising' answer to the question of the role of the symposium in Aristophanes: it appears to be an institution that, in whole or in parts, can perform a variety of functions, both structural and analytical. If one had to summarise, one could say that the basic function of the sympotic codes is to chart and so allow evaluation of changes in the comic world, via a shift from abnormal or non-existent sympotic practice to normal activity. It is as if the natural state of a peaceful and ordered world is an ordered symposium, and the status of characters is indicated through the morality enshrined in sympotic practice: the criterion for judgement is an idealised sympotic practice of balance and restraint, which obviously was not reflected in all actual symposia. At the same time, there are cases where the symposium has less of a normative function and becomes problematic in its own right. For convenience therefore, we shall, perhaps arbitrarily, divide the plays into those where the symposium is involved in analysing social questions and those where it deals with war; in each group there is a play where its function is more complex than in the others. Finally, Ecclesiazusae will allow some reflections on the use of the symposium in comedy generally.

II. SYMPOSIUM AND SOCIETY

Clouds

In the following plays, the symposium is used in various ways to chart the state of relationships, within an oikos or within the polis. In Clouds, abuse of sympotic practice marks the error of Strepsiades’ ways, and his return to the straight and narrow involves correct perceptions about things sympotic. To celebrate his son’s return from the Phrontisterion, he invites him to dinner, and at the subsequent symposium the breach between them becomes overt (1354-8 and 1364-7):

'τειθεί γάρ ειστιώμεθ', ὡσπερ ἵστε, πρῶτον μὲν αὐτὸν τὴν λόραν λαβόντε' ἔγω ἱκέλευσα ἡμᾶς Συμμονίδου μέλος, τόν Κρίτον ὡς ἐπέχθη. ὁ δὲ ἐνθέου ἄρχαν εἰς' ἐφασκε τὸ καθαρίζειν ζέειν τε πίνονθ' ὡσπερεί κάρχρων γυναῖκ' ἀλλοῦσαν... ἐπείτα δὲ ἱκέλευσα' αὐτὸν ἄλλα μυρώσην λαβόντα τὸν Αἰσχύλου λέξα πτι μοι- καθ' ὀντος εὐθὺς εἰπεν- ἔγω γὰρ Αἰσχύλου νομίζω πρῶτον ἐν ποιηταις, ψόφου πλεώ' ἀξίστατον στόμασα κρημνοσοῦν'.

(When we’d dined, as you know, I first told him to take up the lyre and sing Simonides’ song of how the Ram was shorn. He replied straightaway that it was old-fashioned to play the lyre and sing when drinking, as if one were an old woman milling parched barley ... Then I told him at least to take the myrtle-branch and sing me something by Aeschylus. Quick as a flash, he said, ‘Yes, I think Aeschylus is first among poets— for bombast, uncouthness, turgidity and big words’.)

The new philosophy thus disrupts traditional ways not only of thinking but also of social intercourse at the symposium. As a result, brawling breaks out, the negation of the proper 28 For such celebratory deipna, cf. C. Daremberg and E. Saglio, Dictionnaire des antiquités grecques et romaines (Paris 1904) 1597. Parenthetically, one might suggest that such ‘reintegration’ may explain Pheidippides’ reference to the Proteschai (1198-1200), officials equivalent to the later Progeustai who checked the food for festivals according to Athen. (171c-e; cf. also Pherecrates. fr. 7; Aelian, NA xx 10, fr. 39; the verb is not found again until Eustath. 1202.3). In fifth-century Athens, they were probably especially connected with the Apaturia (cf. Phyllittos fr. 7 ἤ τῶν προτεσθόν θαρρόη καλοληθή; Doria was one of the days of the Apaturia [Σ Ach. 146; Hsch. α 5842]). Does mention of these officials and the coining of a verb from their name draw attention to the Apaturia when fathers inducted sons into their phratries, and thus provide an ironic background for the dinner marking the son’s return?

29 Cf. Dover on 1353-90.
THINKING WITH DRINKING

symposium's balanced and civilised behaviour.\textsuperscript{30} The collapse of relationships within the oikos is figured through the collapse of the symposium.

Furthermore, between the invitation (1212) and the catastrophic symposium, come two scenes with creditors: this framing is significant. The dinner is to celebrate Strepsiades' freedom from his obligations to society, specifically his debts. In fact, it marks the isolation of the two symposiasts from the rest of their society (vinously rejected as 'piles of amphoras' [1203]) in two ways, both through the symptptic isolation of father and son, and through the rough expulsion of a fellow-demesman (1219). A symposium 'à deux' was possible, for instance on special occasions such as attempted seduction,\textsuperscript{31} but the refusal to invite others at such a celebratory time is strange, as the contrast with, say, Xuthus' reaction to the discovery of his own son in Euripides' \textit{Ion} suggests. He desires to sacrifice \textit{koinēς τροπέξης δαίμων πρὸς κοινήν πεσών} ('making a common meal at a common table', 653), and instructs Ion to invite τῶν φίλων πλήρων' ... \textit{βουθύτω στὸν ήδονή} ('the complement of your friends' to 'the pleasure of a sacrifice', 664-5). The danger of Strepsiades' isolation is vividly brought home to him when, assaulted by his son, he is forced to appeal for protection to precisely those despised 'neighbours, kinsmen and fellow-demesmen' (1322) whom he has treated with such scorn and violence and excluded from his social life. The value of such ties, even though they may entail debts, is made manifest by this juxtaposition of an exclusive symposium with a demonstration of the usefulness of friends when things go wrong.

At the end, Strepsiades speaks to the \textit{dinos} that stands outside the Phrontisterion (1473), and to the statue of Hermes (1478), god of human commerce, that stands outside his own house. Whether the \textit{dinos} is a cup or a mixing-bowl,\textsuperscript{32} either would symbolise the symposium, so that these two fixtures stand for the world of vinous and social mixing that Strepsiades tries to leave along with his debts (which in part constitute that mixing) for the isolation of the philosophy schools, where you were lucky to get any dinner at all (175-9, 186). His return to a correct perception of the symptptic \textit{dinos}, after its Socratic perversion into a new-philosophical cosmic principle (1473-4), along with his burning of the Phrontisterion, restores a kind of normality to Athens. Unsocial symposia and the misuse of symptptic items bring their own reward.

\textsuperscript{31} Pl. \textit{Symp.} 271c7 ff. In Plut. \textit{Ant.} 70.3-4 a symposium of two is thought pleasant by one misanthrope, but a crowd by Timon.

\textsuperscript{32} In a comedy, it is hard to be certain, but a round-bottomed, handleless \textit{dinos}, probably like the \textit{lebes} on a stand, might seem on balance a slightly unusual item than a large cup to stand outside a house. Much of the terminology of vase-names was laid down in the last century and usage in antiquity can be ambivalent. G.M.A. Richter and M.J. Milne, \textit{Shapes and names of Athenian vases} (New York 1935) 9-10 argue against the use of \textit{dinos} for the shape \textit{lebes} and in favour of its being a cup. In Ar. \textit{Wasps} 616 ff. and Pollux vi 96 it certainly is a cup; in Dionysius fr. 5.2-3 \textit{δύνος μέτεχες} \textit{χαρών μετρήτην}, 'a cup the size of an amphora' suits the exaggerations in this description of an old woman's fondness for cups (cf. Hsch. 6508); in Phylillius fr. 6.1 where a \textit{dinos} is addressed as \textit{α'μφωρε'} it could refer to a larger vessel, unless there were a similar joke to that in Dionysius. However, in Pollux vi 99 \textit{ὁ δὲ ψυκτὴρ πολυβράλητος, διὸ καὶ \textit{δύνον ἐκάλων, ἐν ὕλῃ ἀρκατος} ὁ τολλοὶ δε\' ἀκροτοφορὸν στὸν καλὸν,} it is clearly not a cup (cf. Athen. 530c); a \textit{psukter} could be the size of a \textit{krater}. In Strattis fr. 35, a head similar to \textit{δύνων μετρήτως τετραμμενος} would have more comic force if it referred to the round bottom of the large \textit{lebes} (for which cf. Pollux \textit{LC} and \textit{Σ Ζ \textit{Wasps} 618d}) rather than a round-bottomed cup (cf. \textit{Birds} 806). For a discussion of the \textit{dinos} as an old form of the \textit{krater}, cf. H. Gercke, \textit{Gefäßdarstellungen auf griechischen Vasen} (Berlin 1970) 36-42. \textit{Cf.} also, though they do not clarify matters, \textit{Σ\textdegree} \textit{Clouds} 381, 1473; \textit{Σ\textdegree\textsuperscript{1/2}} \textit{Clouds} 380; Athen. 467d-f.
In Knights, the state of symposiastic practice in Demos’ oikos is a metaphor for the state of public affairs in Athens, and the basic shift is from anomalous persons involved in symposiac activity to greater normality. There are four main passages which are structured around the institutions of the symposium. The first is Demosthenes’ account of Demos’ solitary dining (40-70). The various elements of an evening’s dining are present in 50-2:

>'ιδι Δήμης λαούσαι πρώτον ἐκδίκησας μίαν, ἐνθεύο δόρσου έντραγ γέρο τριάδολον. βούλει παραθέ οι δόρπον.'

(‘Demos, have a bath once you’ve got a single case out of the way; pop that into your mouth; slurp up this; have dessert; take the three obols. Do you want me to bring you your snack later?’)33

In the absence of guests and with the other slaves kept at bay, Paphlagon exercises control over his master, rather as their isolation enabled Pheidippides to treat his father as he wished. A Paphlagonian slave dominating his Athenian master at dinner acts as a clear image for the state of politics in Athens. This description of solitary sympotic activity is then repeated on stage in a parallel scene of anomalous sympotic behaviour, involving a slave-symposium. The two slaves, despairing of ever escaping Paphlagon, seek the bravest way of dying. Rejecting imitation of Themistocles’ bull’s blood, Demosthenes suggests they drink ἀλκρατον οἶνον ἀγαθοῦ δαίμονος, ('neat wine agathou daimonos, 85). As if at a symposium, Demosthenes lies down (κατακλίνησομαι, 98), having praised wine in traditional sympotic terms (924):

>απή, άπα φυσίν κατακλέπτουνεν ἄρας εὔδαιμονος ἄφελούσι τούς φέλους.

(You see, whenever men drink, they become rich, they are successful, they win their law-suits, they are happy, and help their friends).

Nicias steals wine from Paphlagon, who is asleep and ἐνθεύονεν ἐνθεύοναι, τότε πλουτούσι διαπράττουσι νικών δίκας εὐδαιμονούσιν ὄφελούσι τούς φέλους.

(Ni. Take this and pour a libation agathou daimonos. De. Drink deep, drink deep of the Pramnian god. O agathos daimon, the idea is yours not mine.)36

---

33 For ἐνθεύο, ‘used only of eating τρεχήσματα’, and δόρσον of a post-symposiac feast, cf. Neil on 51 and 52. There may also be a double pun in βουρσίνη, pointing to μυροσίνη, a fly-swatter (only Martial iii.82.2, in fact), and also perhaps the branch held by the symposiast.

34 Cf. Pherecrates fr. 137.3; Plut. QC 669b.

35 This was a significant moment: in Eur. Ion 1032-3, the poison is put in the cup at this point.

36 Cf. Nicias’ joke, τοῦ δαίμονος ... τέῳσομαι κακοδαιμονος (111-12).
Slaves drinking symptotically is anomalous, and the anomaly is greater, first because Demosthenes’ repeated demands for neat wine mean more goes down his throat than was customary at such libations, and secondly because he is drinking alone. Gods might enjoy solitary symposia, as they do regularly on vases, and Heracles does so in Alcestis 747-72, but even Euripides’ Cyclops finds it strange that he should not share his wine with his brothers. Amongst mortals, the monophagos was an oddity, and such individual ‘symposia’ hardly counted as proper occasions.

Symptotic imagery recurs through the play, but we pass to its next major structural occurrence, where Demos presides ‘on the Pnyx’ over the contest of gifts proffered by Sausage Seller and Paphlagon. It is through a symposium that Demos’ restoration to his better past is effected. He still dines alone, but things have improved now that the tyrannical Paphlagon has been challenged by a potential saviour, and the slaves have returned to their function as servants. The final stage will be reached only when Demos is himself reintegrated into proper social living. At 1161 ff., the gifts become ones to do with food. A chair and table are brought out, and, as Neil noted, ‘they set out food in something like the natural order of a dinner’: soup and bread are followed by fish and meat; the similar pattern in the second part of Wasp may be compared. Then the ultimate victor brings the wine (1187), ‘mixed three to two’, a recommended measure for the symposium, and this is followed immediately by the tragemata, a rich cake and a hare. It is at this moment when deipnon becomes symposium that the Sausage Seller has the idea of the crucial theft of the hare, and finally triumphs by demonstrating that his ‘dinner-box’ is empty because he has given everything to Demos. 'I put all before you', 1215), he says, using the verb regularly employed of the tragemata. Paphlagon’s unsympotic behaviour in not sharing his food (1218-23) brings his downfall, and the garland passes to his rival (1227-8).

The chorus then dilates on improper and disordered habits at table, the hunger of Thoumantis (1264-73) and the greed of Cleonymus (1291-8); and in between it castigates Ariphrades for ‘corrupting his tongue with shameful pleasures’ (1284), expressing the hope that anyone who disagrees ‘will not drink from the same cup

37 Cf. Theognis 487-8 σο δ' ἐξελέξε τούτῳ μάσταιον | καττάλλεις ετέει; and X. Symp. 2.23; Theopompus fr. 41-2.
38 Discussing the end of Acharnians, E.L. Bowie 114 suggests that one-man symposia are in part a function of the restrictions of the theatre, but that does not mean they cannot have the kind of significance given above.
41 E.g. the Chalcidian ποτήριον (237) is evidence of fomenting a revolt amongst the Euboeans; improper enjoyment of the Prytaneum symposia is regularly held against Paphlagon (281, 709, 766; cf. 535-6 on Cratinus); only Cratinus’ songs could be sung ἐν ξυμπόσῳ (529). On food and politics in the play, cf. D.E. O’Regan, Rhetoric, comedy and the violence of language in Aristophanes’ Clouds (Oxford 1992) 60 ff.
42 ‘The scene is suggested by the banquet given to the citizens of Athens at the Panathenaea’ (Neil on 1168-9), but his commentary shows the deipnon / symposium is a more powerful schema.
43 Neil on 1166-7, quoting Pherecrates fr. 113; Frogs 504-11.
44 Athen. 380d; Pollux vi 55; cf. Neil ad loc.
45 Cf. Neil on 1222 προσέδθων and LSJ s.v. προσέδθων II. παραστήματος (1223) is also regular of meals, LSJ s.v. I.1.1, II.1.
46 1225 may come from Eupolis’ Helots (cf. A.H. Sommerstein, CQ xxx [1980] 51-3), from which we have a sympotic fragment τὰ Στητισχόρου τε κατ’ Ἀλκμάνου Σιμωνίδου τε | ἄριστων ἀνδρίν (fr. 148), and others referring to eating and culinary equipment.
as me’, 1289). This reinforces the message of the previous scene that abuse of sympotic practice leads to punishment.

In the final stage, Agoracritus is given new clothing and invited into the Prytaneum, to take the place of Paphlagon (1404-5). With them go the Spondai, perhaps like the hetairai at an aristocratic symposium. In the Prytaneum, the city entertained at civic symposia distinguished men, Athenian and other. The privilege was much more rarely granted in the fifth century than later, so this is a signal honour. Those who dined there by right were few: victors in the four main games, the Eleusinian Hierophant, the descendants of the tyrannicides Harmodius and Aristogeiton, and ‘people chosen by Apollo’. The entertainment, referred to as a δειπνον in the case of citizens, would have included the traditional symposium. Seated together at the city’s symposium, Agoracritus and Demos, the latter refreshed, anointed and in new clothes as when he dined (Ξυνεστει, 1325) with Miltiades and Aristeides, thus restore normality to the sympotic imagery of the play and to the political system of the city. No longer confined to his house and under the control of the Paphlagon, Demos is now in sympotic splendour at the city’s heart. Paphlagon too ends in a way more appropriate than he began: following Agoracritus’ former trade (1400-1), μεθύων τε ταῖς πόρναισι λοιδορήσεται,

κόκ τῶν βαλανείων πίεται τὸ λουτρίον.

(He will quarrel drunk with the prostitutes, and drink the water from the baths.)

Still drunk and quarrelling with those around like a poor symposiat, he has a liquid more appropriate to his new lowly status. The anomalies of the start of the play are thus reversed, and the four sympotic passages have marked a gradual amelioration in both symposium and city.

Wasps

In Wasps, from its relationships with the other structuring features of the play, the symposium takes on a negative aspect that it has not had in these first two comedies. The play opens with fragmented elements of a sympotic discourse, again involving slaves. Two slaves are possessed by sleep ‘from Sabazius’, a divinity connected with Dionysus (9-10), 48 These people are connected with the aristocratic past of the city. The other form of public entertainment, a product of the democratic state, took place in the tholos, where architecture and entertainment suggested rejection of the Prytaneum’s more aristocratic form (there was no symposium). Cf. Schmitt-Pantel 145-77; F. Cooper and S. Morris in Murray 66-85.

49 Cf. Henry (n.47) 271-5 for the terminology; in the case of foreigners it is referred to as ξένικα.

and play a sympotic game of riddles (γρίφος, 20) with their dreams, 52 (21-3):

προσερέθι τις τοίσι συμπόταις, λέγων
'tι ταυτόν ἐν γῇ τ' ὀπέβαλεν κάν οὐρανῷ κάν τῇ θαλάσσῃ θηρίον τὴν ἀσπίδα.'

(Someone will say to the symposiasts, 'what beast threw away its shield alike on earth, in heaven and at sea?'.)

His own dream περὶ τῆς πόλεως ... τοῦ σκόφους δέλου ('about the whole ship of state', 29) employs a favourite image of sympotic literature and iconography, by which the symposium is imagined as a ship. 53 As in Knights, the motif of slaves unusually in a sympotic context is indicative of an unsatisfactory situation in the house.

The sleep of the slaves recurs after Philocleon’s initial attempts to escape (212-13), and heralds the return of sympotic material in the parodos. This choral entry is in effect a parody of a komos. A group of poor old jurors, guided by awkward sons with feeble lamps, have risen early in the morning (and may go without their deipnon, 311), and are processing to the door of a friend there to sing a song to entice him out. This reverses the pattern of well-fed young men boisterously coming late at night from dinner, accompanied by able-bodied slaves with flaming torches. There are also notable details. The first chorister addressed has the sympotic name ‘Comias’ (230): it is not usual for choristers to have such names. 54 Philocleon’s amoebean reply parallels the kind of language used when the loved one is forbidden exit, like the Young Girl in Eccles. 952 ff. 55 The songs of Phrynichus (219-20, 269) make more sense in a ‘sympotic’ than a legal setting, 56 and indeed they will reappear in the sympotic-comastic finale (1490, 1524). Recollection of youthful exploits (231-9) is also a feature of sympotic behaviour that Philocleon will learn later (1197 ff.). 57 Even the aulos accompanying their entry was also the chief instrument of the komos. 58 The subsequent violence of the chorus’ attack mirrors the beating on the door (θυροκοτείν) that could result from the komos. 59

This parody of a komos embodies an implicit opposition between old juror and young symposiast, which is paralleled by the conflict between the father, who mistrusts drink, and the son who regrets the absence of symposia in the home (1253-5). Philocleon complains of his son (340-1):

οὐκ ἔδω μ’ ὅνδρες δικᾶζειν οὐδὲ δράν οὐδὲν κακῶν, ἀλλὰ μ’ ἐνευχεῖν ἐποιμός ἐστι: ἐγὼ δ’ οὐ βούλομαι

(He won’t let me go to the courts or do any harm: he’s ready to entertain me, but I don’t want it.)

52 For riddles at the symposium, cf. e.g. Hsd. frr. 266-8; Theognis 681-2; Wasps 1308-13; Pl. Symp. 215a; Clearchus fr. 63.1 Wehrli; Pollux vi 107-8; G. Monaco, Paragoni burleschi degli antichi (Palermo 1963); M.L. West, Studies in Greek elegy and iambus (Berlin 1974) 17 n.26; Vaio 340 n.24. For this type of witticism, cf. e.g. Wasps 1225-48, 1308-21; Xen. Symp. 2.14, 20.
53 Cf. Lissarrague 107-22.
54 The other names in 230-4 are not sympotic; cf. ‘Pheredeipnos’ beside three non-sympotic names in 401; ‘Comarchides’ in another sympotic passage in Peace 1142.
56 For tragic songs at the symposium, cf. e.g. Clouds 1365 ff.
57 It is a comastic feature also of the parodoi of Acharnians (211-18) and Lysistrata (271-85).
58 Cf. Pratinas TGrF 4 F 3.4-9; Theognis 825-30; Pl. Symp. 212d; etc. (cf. F.O. Copley, Exclusus amator; a study in Latin love poetry [Madison 1956] 145 n.10).
The unusual entertainment offered in court—Aesopic stories, jokes, tragic recitation, and flute-playing (566-7, 579-82)—is sympotic, and this part ends vinously with Philocleon’s wine-vessel farting martially at Bdelycleon’s cup (617-18). The sympotic schema is even more attenuated in the trial but still present: Philocleon continues to eat, and the charge is one of eating alone; the voting jars are arustichoi (855), jugs for drawing wine.

However, the sympotic returns strikingly when Bdelycleon gets his wish to educate Philocleon by taking him έπι δείπνουν, έπι ξυμπόστουν (1005): the sequence of preparation for and attendance at a symposium structures the action. Philocleon is dressed, and taught to walk like the rich, relate appropriate tales (1174 ff.) and adopt the correct posture for lying down as a συμποσιαστής ... καὶ ξυνομποστικός (‘symposiast and boon-companion’, 1209). The deipnon is imagined (1216-17, 1219):

(Water for our hands! Bring on the tables! We’re dining; we’ve washed our hands; now we’re making the libations ... the flute-girl has started to play, and the symposiasts are ...)

Philocleon is instructed how to take up a song from his neighbour, or to reply suitably to a quotation given by another. After the practice, a real meal is prepared (1250-2) and they leave for dinner at Philoctemon’s. Philocleon’s behaviour at the dinner (1299-1325) is that of one who breaks all the conventions of civilised sympotic behaviour. He defeats all attempts to control him by sympotic jesting, and having removed the torch and flute-girl sets off drunkenly on an especially rowdy solo komos, where violence is offered to passers-by.

The question remains of how this sympotic ending relates to the theme of law-courts and justice, which has been central to the first two-thirds of the play. The following exchange 60 E.g. Alc. fr. 70.5 LP; Lys. 1224, Eccl. 716-17.

62 Athen. 424b-c.
63 Philocleon’s ένδυσιν έστινμεθι; (1218) recalls the slaves’ dreams.
64 For the personnel, cf. I.C. Storey, Phoenix xxxix (1985) 317-33; Vetta (n.3) 117-31.
65 Vases regularly show symposiasts carrying sympotic items through the streets. Vaiο 345 n.47 relates Philocleon’s dancing to the symposium, but he has already left the party. On ἄνεξε πάρεξε (1326) and the komos, cf. Seaford on Eur. Cycl. 203.
THINKING WITH DRINKING

suggests an answer. Philocleon expresses his fears about the troubles wine can bring (including the characteristically comastic θυροκοπήσας, ‘beating on doors’, 1254), and Bdelycleon replies (1256-64):

Βδ. οδικ. ἂν ἔξω δισ. ἀνάγκας καλοὶς τε κάθισαίς
ἡ γῆρα παρηρμήσασσε τὸν πεπονθότα, ἡ λόγον ἔλεξας αὐτοὺς ἀστεῖον τινα, λισοπικόν γέλοιον ἢ Συβαριτικόν, δῶν ἐμοι οὖν ἐν τῷ συμποσίῳ κατὶ ἐς γέλων
τῷ πράγμα ἐπρεπεῖ, ὡστε ἀφεῖς σ’ ἀπολύχατα.

Φ. μοθητέον τάρτα ταῦτα πολλούς τῶν λόγων, εἴπερ ἀποτείχει μηδὲν, ἂν τ’ ἄρα κακῶν.

(Bd. There’s no problem, so long as you consort with gentlemen, because either they beg off the man you’ve insulted, or you yourself tell some amusing story from Aesop or Sybaris, of the sort you’ve learned in the symposium;66 then you turn the thing into a joke, so that he lets you off and leaves you alone. Ph. Well, I’d better learn lots of those stories, if I can pay no penalty when I’ve done wrong!)

This symposium thus acts as a potential third main locus of justice in the play, after the city’s law-courts, comically discussed in all their horror in the first part, and the domestic trial, an opposite kind of justice dispensed by a single judge. We have in effect three possible types of justice—the democratic, the monarchical and the oligarchic—juxtaposed in a manner reminiscent of Hdt. iii 80-2.

In this third kind, certain members of society arrange freedom from legal sanction for themselves, an example perhaps of how the clubs operated ἐπὶ δίκαιας, in Thucydides’ phrase. We see this in action when Philocleon replies to Bdelycleon’s threats of a case brought by the Bread-Seller (1393-5):

οὐδαμῶς γ’, ἐπεί
λόγου διαλλαξομενον αὐτὰ δεξιοί.
ὡστε οἷος ὅτι ταύτῃ διαλλαχθήσομαι.

(No, I’ll have no trouble, because clever words will sort that out; so I’m sure I’ll come to an arrangement with her.)

He then proceeds to tell her Aesopic and other such stories, as he does to the next man who arrives with a witness. His son attempts to beg off those who would prosecute his father (1419-20): his praise of the legal benefits of being a symposiast returns to haunt him. It is up to the audience whether they prefer the Athenian law-courts as a judicial system, or the private courts of senile judges, or the personal arrangements of drunken symposiasts.

The symposium is thus again structural to the whole play. After the slaves’ symposium has marked the abnormality in the oikos, two comastic scenes frame the main action of the play and prompt comparison between themselves. The first ends in ignominious defeat for the comasts, the second in scorn for and apparent freedom from the laws. The latter may represent the triumph of the ‘little man’, but from a polis perspective is less attractive, and the spectator is left to ponder whether, despite the fact that the Attic wasp is as little controllable in court as in a symposium, the legal processes of the city may not be better served by the harsh frugality of the former ‘comasts’ than by the sympotic excesses of a few real ones.

66 Cf. 566 for such tales used to ingratiate defendants with the jurors; also 1401, 1446; Vaio 342-3.
In three plays, the restoration of peace is articulated through the restoration of sympotic enjoyment. In archaic art and literature, the symposium is both complementary to war and opposed to it. In comedy, the two are usually opposed: the symposiast fighting for his particular cause alongside his companions from the drinking group is no longer a dominant aspect of social existence, and the symposium comes to symbolise the liberation from war for everyone. The opposition is seen at its simplest in Peace, which does not need detailed analysis. When the vinously named Trygaeus and his κόντινθεορος (also the word for a drinking vessel especially associated with Dionysus himself) have brought Peace back, a sympoistic celebration of her hidrusis and marriage to Trygaeus is prepared: the hideous monophagia of the Beetle is replaced by preparations for communal feasting. War and the symposium are repeatedly contrasted, in a parabatic chorus (1127 ff.), in subsequent scenes where weapons are turned into sympotic paraphernalia, such as the kottabos (1191 ff.), and in a scene with the sons of Lamachus and Cleonymus and their more or less appropriate sympotic songs. By contrast, the absence of the sympotic motif from the wedding at the end of Birds is perhaps an indication that Peisetaerus’ world is not one of equal participation in a symposium, but a tyranny where sharing has no place. Other plays use the symposium in more complex ways.

Lysistrata

Here too the play is framed through symposium and komos, moving from abnormality to ordered celebration of peace. The women’s actions are inaugurated by wine (181 ff.): their assumption of control over areas of male dominion involves seizing the initiative not just in matters sexual and political, but also sympotic. Citizen women, like slaves, at the symposium is a social anomaly.

Eschewing complete imitation of the oath sworn over a black shield in Aeschylus’ Septem (42 ff.), Lysistrata gives these orders (195-7):

(θεία λέξα τίνα κύδια μεγάλης υπότας, μπλόνσφαγούσα Θάσιον οίνου στοματον, ομόδωμεν ἐν τὴν κύδια μή "πείξειν δόκρ."

(Put a large, black drinking-cup face-upwards on the ground, and when we’ve sacrificed a stannos of Thasian wine let’s swear not to pour water into the cup.)

67 Schmitt-Pantel 17-31. For sympotic and military activity compared, cf. Pl. Laws 1.640-41a, 2.670c8-75c7; Plut. Aem. Paul. 28.5, Mor. 615e-f; Polyb. xxx 14; Athen. 2f, 47e; Tucușan in Murray 254-5.
70 ‘Er erscheint fast ausschliesslich auf Vasenbildern des Dionysischen Bereiches’, (Gericke [n.32] 22; cf. 36-42). For another pun on this word cf. 143-5.
71 1242-4. In 1246-9, until Trygaeus mentions weighing, there is another sympotic resonance: πλάστηγε could again refer to the scale-pan, placed, in other versions of the game, above a statue of Manes, and made to descend to strike his head by wine thrown by the player. On the kottabos, cf. K. Schneider, RE xi (1922) s.v. 'Kottabos' 1528-41; B.A. Sparkes, Archaeology xiii (1960) 202-7; E.K. Borthwick, JHS lxxxiv (1964) 49-53; R.M. Rosen, CQ xxxix (1989) 355-9; Lissarrague 80-6; Hermippus fr. 48; Antiphanes fr. 57; Athen. 665a-68f; and Pollux vi 109-10 for different types (summarised by Rogers on 1244).
73 Cf. Isaeus iii 14 οὔθε ὁδ`οι γαμετα γυναικεῖς ἐχρωνται μετὰ τῶν ἄνδρων ἐκ τὰ δείκνυα, οὔθε συνετησεν οξίωσι μετὰ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων; [Dem.] lxxi 24 καὶ συνετήσαν καὶ συνεδήσατο ἐναντίον πολλῶν Νέαποι αὐτη ὧς ἐν ἑκάτερα υόρας; cf. 33, 48. Contrast Persians (Hdt. v 18-20), and other barbarians (Pl. Laws 1.637d).
The kulix was the regular sympotic cup, and Lysistrata addresses it as the loving-cup (κοιλική φιλοτήτισσα, 203), sharing in which expressed the unity of the symposiasts. Its substitution for the similarly shaped shield, which is judged inappropriate to a rite for peace (189-90), marks the start of their work for harmony. This substitution has the same significance as the sympotic transformations of weapons in Peace or Dicaeopolis’ sympotic treatment of Lamachus’ shield.

The oath-swearing provides a dual portrayal, positive and negative, of the women’s actions. First, there is a collision of ritual codes: at a Greek oath-swearing, the wine was not drunk, but at ceremonies marking peace, it was; the women’s apparent bibulousness thus has a proleptic quality offering the prospect of peace. Second, the kulix normally contained mixed wine, but here it is neat (197): they pervert sympotic practice, but in a good cause. Finally, placing the drinking-cup on the ground may recall the way satyrs on vases do this in a parody of normal mortal drinking: they either perform tricks over the cups or drink out of them while standing upside down.

Two more positive filters are also evoked. The ‘Lenaea vases’ are a series of black- and red-figure stamnoi depicting women round a stamnos. The black-figure vases have a wider range of types of scene, often ecstatic; the red-figure have more dignified representations and a more standard scene. This usually shows, on one side, a mask of Dionysus, a stamnos on a table and women drawing wine from the stamnos or carrying it in skuphoi; and on the other, three women, often with thyrsus and pipes. The differences do not obscure the fact that the vases form a sequence. The image appears therefore to be Athenian, and though what exactly it represents is unclear, it is an example of women connected with wine in a dignified and sober context. The scene in Lysistrata is a mild parody of it. In place of the stamnos, we have a kulix (though the σταμπίνον may evoke the former), and the women are for the most part restrained. On the ‘Lenaea’ vases, the skuphoi are never used for drinking, and Lysistrata’s women do not appear actually to drink their wine, since the oloyle of the Old Women seizing the Acropolis intervenes (240): we expect an oloyle at sacrifices, but this one comes from without. It is true that there is no mask or representation of Dionysus (unless we count the

---

74 E.g. Pl. Symp. 214b ἄγομεν ἐπὶ τῇ κύλικῇ.
75 Cf. LSJ s.v. φιλοτήτισσα II, and Σ here.
76 Aristoph. fr. 14 calls the kulix known as the therikleion a εὐκύκλωτον ὀσπηδόν.
77 Cf. Il. 3.295-301; P. Stengel, Opferbrüche der Griechen (Leipzig and Berlin 1910) 186. Contrast the Scythians (Hdt. iv 70), whose actions perhaps colour the reception of the women’s actions.
78 Burkert (n.51) 71.
79 J. Henderson, Aristophanes: Lysistrata (Oxford 1987) 93-4 suggests that the stamnos was an extravagance in private contexts, quoting Men. Disc. 448-9 ἄφροντα σταμπίνι, οὐχὶ τῶν θεῶν ἐνεκ’ ἄλλ’ ἐξυπότων. But this remark parallels Knemon’s other complaints that people make offerings to the gods in ways that actually benefit themselves: he is not comparing private and public drinking.
82 Denied by J. de la Genière, MEFRA xci (1987) 43-61 (cf. Hamilton 134-8): the red-figure vases (unlike the black) are all by a few artists and only from Etruria. The claim that they represent purely Etruscan iconography would be stronger if there were confirmatory evidence from Etruscan art as in other cases she mentions.
84 Durand and Frontisi-Ducroux (n.81) 89.
statue in the theatre), but this feature is sometimes absent from the vases:\textsuperscript{85} the \textit{stamnos} is the feature that is always present, so the scene would have been recognisable without the mask. Interestingly, the Cleveland Dionysus, an Apulian \textit{bell-krater},\textsuperscript{86} also shows a kind of parody of this scene, apparently in a dramatic context: two satyrs in hairy costume, masks and comic phalloi, one with a \textit{skuphos}, flank a large bust of Dionysus, with three figures (with thyrsus, satyr with pipes, and maenad) on the B side. This might support the notion that \textit{Lysistrata} too is making comic use of a familiar ritual scene of decorous behaviour by women in the context of wine, to contrast with the usual suggestions of bibulousness.\textsuperscript{87}

The second model is evoked by the oath. At the Anthesteria, on the night of Chytroi, the wife of the Archon Basileus entered into a sacred marriage with Dionysus.\textsuperscript{88} Before this, she administered an oath to the ‘Honourable Women’, in which they confirmed their purity and chastity.\textsuperscript{89} The comically reluctant oath of future chastity in the play thus has a serious analogue in the Anthesteria rite.

The dysfunctional nature of the city at this time is then demonstrated by the arrival of the Old Men with logs and vine-torches (308), in another parody of the \textit{komos}. There is also a hint of the wedding \textit{kemos}: the Old Men get a ‘wedding bath’ (378), which, unlike the \textit{hieros gamos} of the Anthesteria, marks the final split between the sexes. Thus, by parodying the symposium while drinking in a public yet relatively dignified manner around the \textit{kulix}, and by refusing their husbands yet swearing an oath of chastity to benefit the city, the women occupy an ambiguous moral position, articulated in part by sympotic imagery.

Towards the end, these disordered sympotic scenes and marital disharmonies are finally replaced by more ordered and satisfactory circumstances: the Acropolis becomes the site of a ‘symposium’ (1225) for Athenians and Spartans together, and husband and wife are reunited. The restoration of male control is figured not just through their renewed political power and the restoration of family life, but also through the restoration of normal sympotic activity. Indeed, the symposium is proposed as the future model for Athenian diplomacy: sober, they are always looking for trouble and suspicious of the Spartans; drunk, they are σωματοσ σοφότατοι (‘wisest symposiasts’, 1227-35). Even if a symposiast sings the wrong scolion (1236-8), peace reigns.\textsuperscript{90} The symposium thus displaces war as the other means of diplomacy.

The play ends in a comastic way with singing and dancing to the accompaniment, not of the usual \textit{aulos} or \textit{cithara},\textsuperscript{91} but of the Spartan bag-pipe (1242): a Spartan instrument accompany-

\textsuperscript{85} E.g. Ox. Ash. M. 523, \textit{ARV}^\text{2} 621 (41); NY Metr. Mus. no. 21-88-3, \textit{ARV}^\text{2} 1072.
\textsuperscript{87} Contrast perhaps Ar. fr. 364 for another, less reputable scene of (older) women: ἀδρότου | Ἐλεάστοι μέλανος μεστὸν κέραμον | καμιμίμεμεναι κότολαις μεγάλαις | ἐνέχεσον.
\textsuperscript{88} Cf. Burkert (n.81) 232-7.
\textsuperscript{89} Cf. Burkert (n.81) 232-7.
\textsuperscript{90} [Dem.] ix 73-8; esp. 78 for the oath ἄργοσενοι κατ' εἰμὶ καθαρὰ κατ' ἄργῃ ἀπὸ <τ> ἄλλλλλ ... κατ' ἀπ' ἄνθρωπος συνούσιας. The association with the Anthesteria is contested by S.M. Peirce, ‘Representations of animal sacrifice in Attic vase-painting 580-380 BC’ (Diss. Bryn Mawr College 1984), for which cf. Hamilton 53-6 \textsuperscript{91} Cf. H. Herm 481; [Hsd.] Scut. 281.
ing a sympotic revel in Athens signifies the new unity. The komos thus marks the final triumph of peace over war: a symposium and subsequent komos were a traditional celebration of a victory. Once again, the women have a role, providing food from their baskets (1182-4) and sharing in the dancing. Though symposia and komoi were regular after weddings, and husband and wife have just been reunited, it is unusual for citizen women to join in this comastic dancing, but appropriate perhaps for the ending of a play of reconciliation brought about by female initiative and inaugurated by wine. Disordered female sympotic actions and a violent komos early in the play are replaced by more acceptable and peaceable ones. In a way, in 411 women at the komos would have been no more strange than Athenian and Spartan together at the symposium. These sympotic impossibilities tacitly reflect the impossibility of the play’s action.

_Acharnians_

Here Amphitheus’ treaty-wine inaugurates the plot, and Dicaeopolis’ words on accepting the thirty-year treaty are those of a man receiving the cup at a symposium (196, 199):

> αὖται μὲν δζουσ’ ἀμβροσίας καὶ νέκταρος...
> τεῦτας δέχομαι καὶ σπένδομαι κάκτισμαι.

(These smell of ambrosia and nectar ... I receive them, and pour a libation and drink them down.)

Early in the play, wine effects a double characterisation of the Acharnians, which foreshadows a similar representation of Dicaeopolis at the end. The Spartans’ trampling of their vines (233) justifies their desire for war, but their attack on Dicaeopolis’ celebration of the Rural Dionysia puts them in a negative light. Their violent reaction when they smell (179) Amphitheus’ wine recalls the Centaurs, whom the smell of the miraculously aged wine given by Pholus to Heracles caused similarly to break up a symposium with their tree-branches.

As in _Knights_, a sympotic opening is followed by three main sympotic segments, in which the subsequent progress of the victory of peace over war is charted. The process starts when Dicaeopolis discomfits Lamachus (582-6): 92 The appeal to Μνούμνα (1248) recalls the sympotic use of remembrance of past events: cf. Rösl (n.50); M. Simondon, _La mémoire et l’oubli dans la pensée grecque_ (Paris 1982).

---

93 Cf. e.g. Pindar’s epinicians as komoi (C. Carey, _AJP_ cx [1989] 545-65, esp. 549); Agathon’s victory in _Pl. Symp._ and [Dem.] ix 33; also Alexander’s seven-day komos after his Indian victories at Diod. xvii 106.1; Plut. _Alex._ 67.1.
94 The staging and allocation of parts at the end is highly problematic, but if Sommerstein’s (persuasive) arguments in favour of Lysistrata’s giving the commands in 1273 ff. are right, we would have a scene with her in charge parallel to the oath-swearings at the start: cf. Sommerstein (n.90) 221-2.
95 Cf. Daremberg and Saglio (n.28) 1597.
96 Neaera again: [Dem.] ix 33 καὶ ὄς ὀλίους τε πολλοὺς ἐπὶ κόμων ἔχον ἥλθεν αὐτὴν.
97 For Spartan hostility to the symposium, cf. _Pl. Laws_ 1.637a-b.
99 δέχομαι so regularly, and ἐκπίπτωμαι = ‘drain off’ in _Anac. PMG_ 373.2 (and = προσπινο in id. 433.2). Curiously, there are echoes of the Cyclops’ reaction to Odysseus’ miraculous wine: compare ὁ δὲ δέκτος καὶ ἐκπίπτει and ὀλλὰ τὰ ὄσ’ ἀμβροσίας καὶ νέκταρος ἔστω ἁπλοῦς (Od. ix 353, 359). Is Dicaeopolis’ Cyclopean isolation and selfishness thus foreshadowed at this crucial moment, and does his opposition to the one-eyed Pseudartabas hide a potential similarity?
100 Diod. iv 12; the Acharnians use equally primitive stones.
A. M. BOWIE

Δι. άλλαντιμιλω σ’ ἀπενεχὲ μου τὴν μορμόνα.
Λα. ἱδού. Δι. παράδεις γνω ὑππέλκειν αὐτὴν ἔμοι.
Λα. κεῖται. Δι. ψέψε νῦν ἀπὸ τοῦ κράνους μοι τὸ πτέρον.
Λα. τούτῳ πτέλων σοι. Δι. τῆς κεφαλῆς νῦν μου λείβοι, τ’ εὔχεθενοι. βδελύττομαι γὰρ τοὺς λόφους.

(Di. Please, take away your bug-a-bo. La. There you are. Di. Turn it upside down. La. Upside down it is. Di. Now take the feather from your helmet. La. There you are, a feather. Di. Right, take hold of my head so that I can be sick—I hate crests.)

Symposiasts being sick into a bowl whilst a slave or hetaira holds their heads are common on sympotic vessels, and the feather is regularly mentioned as a means of procuring vomiting, as in Theopompos’ list of sympotic paraphernalia:101 σπόγγος, λεκάνη, πτερόν λεπάστη πάνυ πυκνῆ, ῃ ἐκποίουσ’ ἄκρατον ἐχαθοῦ δαίμονος tέττις κελαδεῖ.

(sponge, bowl, feather, copious drinking-cup, from which she drinks neat wine with an ‘agathou daimonos’ and sings like a cicada.)

As in Peace, the use of weapons for the body’s ease represents a satisfying initial triumph of the symposium over the play’s early violence and inaugurates Dicaeopolis’ new world.

After the expulsion of the anti-sympotic sycophant Nicarchus, the κρατήρ κακῶν, τριτήρ δίκων... καὶ κυλίς τὰ πρόσματα ἐγχυκάσσθαι (‘krater of evils, mortar103 for law-suits ... and cup for stirring up trouble’, 937-9), the Chorus celebrates Dicaeopolis’ new world thus (979-87):

οὐδέποτ’ ἐγὼ Πόλεμον οἶκαδ’ ὑποδέξομαι, οὐδὲ παρ’ ἐμοὶ ποτε τὸν Ἀρμόδιον ἔσεται Ξυνακατακλινεῖς, ὅτι παροινικὸς ἀνήρ ἔνω, ὅτις ἔπὶ πάντ’ ἄγαθο’ ἔχοντας ἐπικαμάσας ἡράκλῳ πάντα κακᾶ, κάνεστέρε θάκχει cαμάχετο καὶ προσέτε πολλὰ προκαλομένου πίνε κατάκεισο λαβὴ τὴν ἒλπης ἐλπῆς τὰς χρωμάς ἥπτε πολὺ μᾶλλον ἐν τῷ πούρι, ἐξέχει θ’ ὑμόν βία τὸν οἶνον ἐκ τῶν ἀμπέλου.

(I will never receive Polemus into my house, nor will he ever sing the ‘Harmodius’ scolion as he lies beside me, because he is a violent drunkard. He came on a komos to us when we had plenty, and behaved abysmally: he turned things over, scattered them about, and brawled, and when I invited him more than once to ‘drink, lie down, take this loving-cup’, he started to burn the vine-props in the fire all the more, and spill the wine violently from our vines).

The effect of war on Greece is represented in sympotic terms, and Polemus’ banishment from society is reflected in his banishment from the symposium for refusing to respect its decorum or to perform its traditional acts. Polemus’ burning of the vine-props and destruction of the wine 101 Cratinus fr. 271, 292; Plato Com. fr. 201; Nicander, Alex. 362.

102 Fr. 41; see passages quoted by Rogers on Ach. 584.
103 τριτήρ also means a vat into which wine is run (Isaeus fr. 24; Pollux vii 151).
recalls the Spartans complained of earlier.\footnote{104}

Finally, there is a reprise of the scene with Lamachus, when he and his shield are once again summoned to repel a Boeotian invasion, while Dicaeopolis is called to dinner at the Choes festival by the priest of Dionysus (1071 ff.). Dicaeopolis is to bring a kiste of food and his chous for the drinking-competition, the rest—couches, tables, cushions, coverlets, garlands, myrrh, \textit{tragemata}, cakes, \textit{hetairaiv}—are all provided. A long stichomythic scene follows, during which each makes suitable preparations, Lamachus for war, when \textit{χειμέρα τά πράγματα} (‘it’s wintry business’), Dicaeopolis for his supper, when \textit{συμποτικά τά πράγματα} (‘it’s symptic business’, 1141-2). The very form of this scene, in which one character caps the words of another, has its analogue in similar sympotic practice.\footnote{105} The subsequent contrast between the wounded Lamachus, supported by two attendants, and Dicaeopolis, supported by two \textit{hetairai}, makes the point of the symposium’s triumph even more firmly. We thus end again with a \textit{komos}, this time with wine-skin and \textit{hetairaiv}: even the cry of \textit{τὴνέλλα καλλίνικε} may be comastic.\footnote{106}

The treatment of Lamachus’ shield is again important for the fuller meaning of this scene. It is repeatedly said to be decorated with a Gorgon, a common shield-emblem which is obviously fitting for a man symbolising war, and may actually have adorned the shield of Lamachus.\footnote{107} Its function was to terrify and so render ineffective the enemy soldier.\footnote{108} Dicaeopolis’ disdain for the power of the Gorgon on the shield, which earlier inspired at least mock fear but now provokes only laughter, shows how the horror of war’s face has been exorcised in Dicaeopolis’ world of peace, much as Polemus has been banned from violent disruption of the Chorus’ symposium. Lamachus’ grim martial Gorgon is treated as if it were one of the very many symptotic representations of this figure whose sheer repetition neutralised its terrifying force: ‘virtually all representations ... exploit ... the essential ambivalence of the grimace that alternately arouses fear and laughter, thus providing the Greeks in their daily life with the visible manifestation of a horror that has been tamed’.\footnote{109}

Though this scene can be thus decoded as symbolising the symposium’s triumph over the threats of war, it can also be interpreted in another way. The Gorgon-head is one of those rare cases, along with e.g. Dionysus and the satyrs, where a figure looks out of the drinking-vessel. Such figures have been plausibly interpreted as representing the ‘Dionysiac gaze’, which looks at the drinker and questions him about his behaviour under the influence of the wine.\footnote{110} Thus Dicaeopolis’ triumph over the controlling power of the Gorgon’s Dionysus-like stare, however attenuated that power may have been in the symposium, could be interpreted as effective freedom from the constraints on behaviour imposed by the symposium.

The point is given greater specificity in 1128-31:

\begin{displaymath}
\Lambda\. \kappaατάχει \epsilon\delta\pi\tau\upsilon\lambda\alpha\iota\upsilon\nu\eta. \mathrm{\epsilonv\ \tau\upsilon\ \chi\alpha\lambda\kappa\iota\omega}
\end{displaymath}

\begin{displaymath}
\mathrm{\epsilon\upsilon\ η\chi\rho\omicron\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\alpha} \mathrm{\deltaειλλας \phiευ\zeta\omicron\omicron\upsilon\mu\nu\nu}\nu\eta\nu
\end{displaymath}

\footnote{104} Furthermore, as L. Edmunds, \textit{YCS} xxvi (1980) 20 points out, ‘since Aristophanes... has defined comedy as wine-song (cf. 499-500), the characterization of War as the enemy of wine ... implies ... that War is the enemy of the festival, of the sacral basis of ... peace’.

\footnote{107} So \textit{Σ. Αχ.} 574; cf. \textit{Peace} 474.

\footnote{109} Frontisi-Ducroux in \textit{Béard} 159-60; cf. Vernant (n.108) 149.

\footnote{110} Cf. e.g. Frontisi-Ducroux in \textit{Béard} 151-65.
A M. BOWIE

Δ. κατάχει σὺ τὸ μέλι. κάννθαρον κτιζόμενον κλάσει κελεύουν Λάμαχου τὸν Γοργάσσου.

La. Boy, pour on the oil. In the bronze111 I see an old man who’ll be on a charge of desertion. Di. And you pour on the honey. Here one can clearly see an old man telling Lamachus son of Gorgasos to go hang.)

The symposium tests the drinker’s nature: wine was a ‘mirror’ of his nature, not just by what it caused him to reveal, but also by the way it and the vessels that held it offered him a range of possible other identities.112 The same idea appears in the games of comparisons played.113 So in this passage, we have two reflected images (not in wine, it is true, but reflection is the key idea), of a man who is either a shirker or happily freed from the demands of generals, that is, from a citizen’s duties. Both characterisations are possible, even if Lamachus exaggerates in threatening with prosecution for desertion one who has not been called up: Dicaeopolis’ carefree sympotic enjoyment is little help when the Boeotians attack. War does not stop because someone decides it would be nice if it did: barring Polemus from a symposium is easier in imagery than reality, and war against invaders has its part to play if one wishes to be safe to enjoy the symposium.

This dual characterisation of Dicaeopolis is confirmed in the final scenes, where we seem to have a double appearance of sympotic imagery. First, there is the Priest of Dionysus’ symposium,114 which is clearly different from the Choes drinking-competition that features at the end of the play and in which Dicaeopolis has been victorious. This competition was itself a kind of ‘parody’ of a symposium, at which each man sat alone, in silence, without a garland and with his own chous.115 We have therefore a normal celebratory symposium juxtaposed with one constructed to enable the city to accept the polluted outcast Orestes.116 There are thus two possible views of Dicaeopolis: as the triumphant champion of peace welcomed back as a example to the city he abandoned, and as the man whose actions, like Orestes’, put him beyond the pale. Is the city’s welcome of this man to its symposia the result of the realisation that he was right, of a new attitude of forgiveness, or a further example of its earlier willingness to entertain those who only appear to have the city’s interests at heart?

The ambiguities in the sympotic imagery of this play mirror similar problems of deciding how we are to read Dicaeopolis.

111 ‘Lamachus oils the boss of his shield to make it shine more’, (Συµµ. 1128). χαλκίνον is not however so used elsewhere, meaning usually ‘a pot or cauldron’. Pollux quotes this passage for the meaning ‘metal reflector (of lamp)’: τὴν ἑλαφρὰν ἐπέχυσιν, ἂν Ἐπούλη χαράριν χαλκίνον ἀνάμιμαν. καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης... (x 92; cf. vi 110 = ‘bowl of a kottabos’); cf. Xen. Symp. 7.4 on the lamp and its reflector). However, since, in his corresponding lines, Dicaeopolis pours honey on his cake and this was earlier the counterpart of the shield (1124-5), the oil must be poured on the shield.

112 E.g. ‘the satyr ... presents man with the image of his hidden desires, of the savagery he holds in check, the exhibition of a truth quite different from his official identity’ (Frontisi-Ducroux in Béard 156).

113 Cf. n.52 above. I know, however, of no texts where reflections in wine are discussed thus. Catoptromancy, for the first time in history, is another theme here: cf. Συµµ. 1128 and A. Delatte, La catoptromancie greque et ses dérivés (Lige and Paris 1932) 133-5.

114 If it does represent an event at the Choes, it is probably a private continuation of the drinking competition: cf. Hamilton 12-13; G. van Hoorn, Choes and Anthestheria (Leiden 1951) 30-3.

115 The evidence is Eur. IT 947-60 (esp. ἔγρος ἓδων, 953). Hamilton, who takes a very sceptical line on what we can know of the Anthestheria, suggests that this aetiology is the creation of Euripides (15), in part because the gloomy nature of the IT rite contrasts with that of the celebratory nature of the comic version. I see no problem, however, in a rite with different aspects that different genres could evoke for different purposes. 958-60 also seem odd if Euripides has made the connection up. Cf. on the festival Burkert (n.81) 213-47; Pickard-Cambridge (n.81) 1-25; N. Robertson, HSCP xciv (1993) 197-250.

Several of the aspects of the symposium we have isolated reappear together in Ecclesiazusae. In Lysistrata, a movement from abnormality to normality in sympotic practice articulated a move from a dislocated society to one at peace. Here, we again move from a normal but unsatisfactory political situation to its opposite, but this time the symposium, while it recalls the celebratory symposia at the ends of other plays, does not simply symbolise a social utopia but actually constitutes it: the democracy is replaced by a form of sympotic communism.

The women again seize power by usurping male functions, this time by disguising themselves as men, occupying the Assembly and voting themselves into office. Praxagora’s plans for the city involve not just making it into μνπνν οικησν (‘a single household’, 674), but also turning the political institutions into sympotic ones (673-709). The sympotic element is not entirely absent from their planning, but as at the start of Wasps its significance is not immediately clear. Woman A justifies her expectation that wearing the garland will lead to a drink by reference to the male assembly (136-43):

νη την Ἀρτεμιν
καὶ ταύτα γ’ ἐξώρον. τὰ γούν βουλεύματα αὐτῶν δὲν πράξασιν ἐνθυμομένοις δισπερ μεθυόντων ἔστι παραπεπλημένων.
καὶ νη Δία σπένδουσι γ’. ἢ τίνος χαίρε τοσάτω’ δὲν ήθχοντ’, επερ οἶνος μὴ παρὴν;
καὶ λοιποδύναι δ’ δισπερ ἐμπακικότες, καὶ τὸν παροινοῦντ’ ἐκφέρουσι’ οἱ τοξόται.

(Oh, they drink alright, and neat wine at that! At least, when you look at the decisions they take, they are like the frenzied ideas of drunks. And they pour libations: why would they pray so much if there were no wine there? They also insult each other like drunks, and the archers carry out the ones who get violent.)

Though she is silenced by Praxagora, the point is made and the women will replace this unproductive drunken behaviour in the Assembly with a world ruled by themselves, where a continuous symposium will take place in the political buildings and institutions of the city. Praxagora explains in 675 ff.: the courts and stoas will become dining-rooms; the orators’ rostrum will contain the mixing-bowls and water-jars, and there young boys will sing of the brave and cowardly in war. The machines which allocated men to courts will now be taken to the Agora to the statue of Harmodius, celebrated in sympotic song, there to allot men to dining-rooms. The women will provide everything διστε μεθυσθεὶς αὐτῷ στεφάνῳ | πάς τις ἀδεισιν τὴν διδά λαβίν (‘so that everyone will take his torch and go home drunk with his garland’, 691-2). The women will hail the men returning home and offer them attractive young women (though with certain rules that make this offer not the unmitigated delight the men might see it as): δείπνον, symposium and κόμος are thus all taken care of. One change in sympotic practice will be that the prostitutes, who seem to include the hetairai who could be hired for symposia, will be replaced by citizen women (718-24): if οἶκος becomes πολις, wives must have a ‘public’ role. Finally, just as the equality of the diners was central to the symposium, so everything is now to be held in common, and, as at an eranos, everyone will pool their goods (ἐξ τοῦ μέσου, 602). The list of goods that all will have—‘rolls, fish, barley-bread, cloaks, wine, garlands, chick-peas’ (606)—has clear sympotic overtones.

---

117 In 590-600, κοινο-compounds appear six times; cf. 611-14.
118 Cf. [Dem.] xxv 21.
A female herald summons the citizens to the lottery and announces the preparations: there are tables, couches covered with skins and blankets, kraters being mixed, unguent-sellers at hand, fish, hare, cakes, soup and tragemata in preparation, garlands being woven (834-52). As Schmitt-Pantel points out, 'ce repas ... bien loin d’être à l’image d’un banquet civique traditionel, a tous les caractères du banquet privé ... Les aliments proposés dans ce systesmon sont ceux des repas privés ... les modes de cuisson sont ceux de la cuisson domestique'. Praxagora’s new world is thus essentially a private symposium on a city-wide scale. The Orphics, in Plato’s somewhat tendentious account, promised such a permanent symposium to their initiates: εὔς Αἴτου γὰρ ἀγαγόντες τὸ λόγο καὶ κατακλύσαντες καὶ συμπόσιον τῶν ὀστῶν κατασκευάζοντες ἐστεφανωμένους ποιούσιν τὸν ἄπαντα χρόνον ἡδὴ διάφειν μεθούντας, ἡγησάμενοι καλλιστον ἁρετής μισθον μέθον αἰώνιον (‘they take the just to the other world and provide them with a banquet of the Blest, where they sit for all time carousing with garlands on their heads, as if virtue could not be more nobly recompensed than by an eternity of intoxication’).

They did not however balance this offer with any such catch as Praxagora’s sexual legislation, which as much as the permanent symposium marks the strangeness of this new world. The effects of this legislation are shown alongside the symptic pleasures. Between the Heraldess’ announcement and the Serving Girl’s expressions of delight at the excellence of the wine (1123), there is a grim scene in which a young man on a komos is deprived of his young girl-friend by increasingly unappetising old women, and finally exits giving instructions for his funeral. The ending is thus a disturbing mixture both of fantasy leading to a utopian world of unity and self-indulgence, and of a sexual code likely to lead to a ‘land of Oedipuses’ (1042). As at the end of Wasps, the symposium triumphs, but again it is not clear that this is necessarily beneficial to everyone. Here then the symposium functions as an ambiguous signifier, offering generalised pleasure, but with a sting in the tail, that is, the komos, for those expecting the traditional pleasures associated with it.

The ending of the play and how far it is bitter or ironic has been much discussed, and here is not the place to discuss that matter in full. Aristophanes certainly emphasises the grim aspects of the seduction of the Young Man, but a consideration of the scene in terms of the symposium may prevent one over-emphasising its unpleasantness. The end of the play essentially shows how the logic of the reversals involved in the political and sexual conversion of Athens entails comparable reversals in the symposium, which generate the comedy of the scene. The symposium cannot become the medium of public political life in the new Athens without changing its essential nature to accommodate new demands from the mature women now in political control. Symposia now take place in public not private, citizen women not hetairai provide sexual and other services, the komos ends not in the house of attractive youth but of terrifying old age. The real symposium is an essentially male-dominated institution; mature males were privileged over younger and especial licence was apparently given to men.

---

119 229-30.
122 A comparable scene of young man on komos and old lover appears near the end of Plautus (1040 ff.), but the very homely ending of that play makes no use of other symptic imagery.
of advanced age, the komos offered opportunities for self indulgence, especially it seems for the younger members. All of this must now change, so that women and especially older women have their due: as in Lysistrata, sexual and political control is accompanied by sympotic control, as Praxagora becomes the city’s symposiarch.

One might wonder too whether the end of Ecclesiazusae does not reflect upon comedy’s use of this convenient closural technique and the implied assumption that the symposium is an unproblematic metaphor for idealised existence. Lysistrata seemed aware of the improbability of its final symposium, and here too the symposium is proposed as the structure of a utopia, but its implementation acknowledges the problems involved. The institutions of the symposium seem inadequate: reversed to fit the new political reality, they may offer a vision of endless vinous bliss but also involve sexual inversions that threaten the fabric of society. The symposium cannot become a model for society without changing itself to fit its new function and context, and these changes render it in many ways unlike its original form.

It was the function of the symposium under the gaze of Dionysus to pose questions to the drinker about his behaviour and nature. Comedy too posed questions to the audience in a similar way, and used grotesque masked figures as did the sympotic vessels. At the same time, Comedy may be said, especially in Ecclesiazusae, to put questions to the symposium itself. The equality of drinkers round the krater may not be a bad model for a democracy and sympotic activity may have its attractions, but essentially symposia are private celebrations which, while they may be employed to symbolise a political ideal in various ways, do not offer a practical solution to unsatisfactory political circumstances. Dionysus may pose questions to the city through comedy, but his characteristic symposia, so often employed by Dionysiac comedy, do not necessarily give answers.

A.M. BOWIE

The Queen’s College, Oxford

125 For comedy as a symposium, cf. Plut. Mor. 10c (Socrates not offended by Clouds ὁς κρα τὸν συμποσίου μεγάλῳ ἐν τῷ θεάτρῳ θάπτετο); Cratinus fr. 182 oδὴ εὐθύς ἡμεῖς, ὡς ὁ πολλαίως | λόγος, αὐτομέτατος ἀνθρώπος ἔνοι | κομμών ἐπὶ δοῦτα θεατῶν; also Metagenes fr. 15; Astyd. TGrF 60 F 4; K-A on Ar. fr. 347. Cf. Philochorus FGrH 328 F 171 (n.27).
126 Cf. A.M. Bowie 14-17.